What were the key factors that affected the fund's performance?

Avantis International Large Cap Value ETF returned 22.37% for the reporting period ended August 31, 2025. The fund seeks long-term capital appreciation. The commentary below refers to the fund's performance compared to the MSCI World ex USA Value Index.

- Non-U.S. developed markets stocks rallied for the 12-month period, which was characterized by slow global growth and upbeat corporate earnings results. Stocks advanced despite tariff policy uncertainty, interest rate volatility, geopolitical tensions and persistent inflation. Large-cap stocks generally underperformed small caps, and within the large-cap universe, value outpaced growth.
- The fund's emphasis on companies with the highest profitability and book-to-market characteristics, which underperformed, weighed on results. An underweight versus the index in companies with the lowest profitability and book-to-market traits, which also underperformed, modestly aided performance.
- Sector weightings, a byproduct of the fund's focus on companies with high profitability and book-to-market metrics, detracted overall. An underweight to the financials sector, which outperformed, and an overweight to the consumer discretionary sector, which underperformed, were key detractors.
- Excluding real estate investment trusts (REITs), which is a strategic rather than tactical decision, boosted results. REITs underperformed for the period.
