What were the key factors that affected the fund's performance?

Avantis U.S. Mid Cap Value ETF returned 11.65% for the reporting period ended August 31, 2025.

The fund seeks long-term capital appreciation. The commentary below refers to the fund's performance compared to the Russell Midcap Value Index.

- Against a backdrop of positive corporate earnings results, resilient economic growth and federal tax relief legislation, U.S. stocks broadly rallied for the 12-month period. Stocks advanced despite periodic volatility from tariff policy uncertainty, rising interest rates, geopolitical tensions and persistent inflation. Within the U.S. market, mid-cap stocks outperformed small caps but underperformed large caps, while growth stocks broadly outperformed their value-style counterparts.
- The fund's overweight versus the index in companies with the highest profitability and book-to-market characteristics, which outperformed, aided relative performance. Additionally, an underweight in companies with the lowest profitability and book-to-market characteristics, which underperformed, also contributed to performance.
- Excluding real estate investment trusts (REITs), which is a strategic rather than tactical decision, aided relative results. REITs underperformed for the period.
- Sector allocations, which are byproducts of the fund's focus on valuation metrics, broadly contributed to performance. An underweight to the underperforming health care sector and an overweight to the outperforming financials sector were key contributors.
